          A                          G
And the men who hold high places,
D          G          A
must be the ones who start
                          G
To mold a new reality,
D          A          G
closer to the heart,
D          A          G
closer to the heart

          A                          G
The blacksmith and the artist,
D          G          A
reflect it in their art
                          G
They forge their creativity,
D          A          G
closer to the heart,
          D          A          G
yes, closer to the heart

          A                          G
Philosophers and ploughmen,
D          G          A
each must know his part
                          G
To sow a new mentality,
D          A          G
closer to the heart,
          D          A          G
yes, closer to the heart
